

K-SERIES

The masterpiece, K-SERIES epitomizes Japanese post modernism designed in 1972 by Shiro Kuramata, the Japanese legendary interior designer. By four Japanese craftsmen, it is made of draping a heated single piece of an acrylic sheet over a pole at same time, allowing it to hang naturally and harden. The opalescent acrylate resin of the exquisite smooth skewed surface generates a gradient glow and radiates with playfulness through the illusion of floating. Nebulous yet its unforgettable icon grabs your heart.

SHIRO KURAMATA

Shiro Kuramata (1934-1991) is a prolific Japanese interior designer who had seen potential in the latest science and technology since the '60s and created a number of innovative modern products. After studying interior design at Kuwasawa Design school, he founded the Kuramata Design Office in Tokyo in 1965. He frequently employed industrial materials such as acrylic, glass, aluminum, and steel mesh while combining them into traditional Japanese aesthetics for his works. Many of his works were created under the theme of “be free of gravity”, which are transparent and floating like objects adapting to daily life. K-SERIES is one of the works that thoroughly reflects his philosophy.
